BOSSSED UP & FOUR LETTER CONSULTING LAUNCH NEW PROGRAM TO HELP COMPANIES LEAD THROUGH #METOO & CREATE CULTURES OF EQUALITY

“It’s time for workplaces to Evolve”

(Denver, CO) -- Today Bossed Up and Four Letter Consulting partnered to launch a new corporate consulting program, Evolve, to help organizations create cultures of gender equality and inclusion.

“If there’s one thing the #MeToo movement has made clear,” said Bossed Up Founder Emilie Aries, “it’s that too many workplaces are still failing women.”

The Evolve Program is a three-phase culture change consulting program that starts with a proprietary assessment imbued with intersectionality throughout.

“We’ll look at retention, promotion, and leadership pipelines while accounting for inclusion as it relates to gender, race, age, parental status, and more,” said Aries.

The program will then strategize with companies to create lasting culture change by looking at the people, processes, and technology that might be perpetuating systemic injustice.

“We are definitely in a moment where businesses are demanding more creative solutions than the ones that have gotten us to this point,” said Laurel Smylie, Partner of Four Letter Consulting.

Finally, Evolve will implement the custom consulting strategy by providing training, coaching, and employee support side-by-side with organization stakeholders.

“We know organizations are looking for custom solutions to create winning cultures,” said Bossed Up Partnerships Director Emi Kamemoto, “and that’s what this new program is designed to deliver.”

Evolve seeks to support organizations invested in making gender equality a central part of their corporate culture and prevent a #MeToo moment from eroding employee trust.

“In order to make sustainable change we need to find a way to make diversity and gender equity everybody’s priority,” said Janelle Coleman, Partner of Four Letter Consulting.
